

Diversity is as critical in media as it is in ecosystems. The FCC's proposed abandonment of current regulations preventing excessive consolidation in media ownership are contrary to the public interest, the health and well-being of democracy in the U.S., and common sense. The only winners emerging from such an action will be the major media corporate conglomerates. Don't let this happen. Keep these regulations in place and strengthen them. They promote citizenship, not consumerism, and we need citizenship more than ever nowadays.
